

POSITION INFORMATION

Posting Number: 2600

Job Title: Assistant/Associate Professor

Appointment Basis: Academic Year, 9 month

Appointment Status: Tenure System Faculty

Employment %: 100

Faculty: Salary Range
Support Staff: Pay Minimum
Salary/Rank Commensurate with Experience

Position Summary: The Department of Physiology at Michigan State University invites applications for an academic year tenure system position at the assistant or associate professor level. We seek applicants whose research utilizes circuit-to-system level approaches to study the regulation of normal physiology, and that of diseased states. Priority will be given to candidates whose research applies state-of-the-art methods, including optical, chemogenetic, neurophysiological, and calcium and functional imaging techniques to assess and/or modulate the activity of specific neuronal ensembles. The ideal applicant will be an outstanding investigator with exceptional promise, a proven record of research achievement, the ability to attract funding in their research area, and who will contribute to the highly interactive and collaborative Department of Physiology (<http://www.psl.msu.edu/>) and neuroscience community at MSU.

Faculty: Minimum Qualifications
Support Staff: Minimum Requirements
The successful applicant will be expected to establish and maintain a vigorous, extramurally funded, research program in his/her area of expertise, and contribute to teaching in the Department's undergraduate, graduate and/or professional educational programs. Applicants should hold a PhD, DO, MD, or equivalent degree, with at least 3 years of postdoctoral experience. Evidence of level-appropriate funding for applicants at the assistant professor level is highly desirable, and an active, extramurally funded, research program is required for applicants at the associate professor level. Laboratory space, start-up funds, and salary will be competitive and commensurate with academic rank and experience.
